1	Wind Resource Assessment and Site Suitability of Onshore Grid Connected Wind Farms in Fiji 	Author: Navlit Swastika Prasad Description: The purpose of this study is to carry out a micro-scale wind resource assessment and site suitability assessment of model potential onshore grid-connected wind farms in Rakiraki, Natadola, Nabouwalu and Udu in Fiji, using the Wind Atlas Analysis and Application Program (WAsP), WAsP Engineering, and the Windfarm Assessment Tool (WAT). The analysis was conducted using observed wind speed and direction data gathered from the mesoscale wind resource mapping exercise (Dayal, 2021), the Fiji Department of Energy (FDOE), and the Fiji Meteorological Services (FMS). The predominant wind direction is east at the Natadola site and south-east at the Rakiraki, Nabouwalu, and Udu sites. Location- FNU Institutional Repository IR Link: Click Here	CETVET

4 Groundwater Exploration Using an Integrated Approach of Remote Sensing, AIS –Artificial Intelligence (machine learning), and Geophysics Survey 	Author: Malakai Tuinasau Tadulala Description: The study examines customised groundwater (GW) solutions to tackle the emerging water crisis faced by disadvantaged communities living near the Nadi, Momi, and Sabeto river watersheds, which cover a total surface area of 730 km². The hydraulic continuity of the pressurised water supply to these areas has proven inadequate, resulting in insufficient water access. Consequently, the Water Authority of Fiji (WAF) classified this region as a non-metered water reticulation coverage area. Location- FNU Institutional Repository IR Link: Click Here	CETVET
